

A Flickr Website Workshop, November 16th.

From: Terry Clark <etc49@charter.net>

Todd Church & I are going to hold a workshop in November to talk about online posting of images to Flickr. You can see what posting is like by going to www.Flickr.com. I'm also giving a similar program for the Macintosh User Group this month and thought there might be some people in the camera club who might like to attend this meeting.

Part of the reason for talking about Flickr is that it is a free way to post images to the Internet to share with family and friends. You can also share them with the whole world or not, your choice. It has been lots of fun for me to get feedback from all kinds of people all over the world and to see the amazing range of photography going on around us.

Todd set up a group for TACC members on Flickr so we can share image among ourselves as well. Currently we have 12 members from the club. Also, this way other people can see more of what TACC members are doing. We hope other TACC members will join this group as well. If you have any curiosity and want to see what is going on before the TACC program, you are welcome to come to the Cherry MUG meeting (which is open to all). If you can't come to the MUG, be sure to come to the TACC workshop on November 22nd.
